New NWT Species at Risk Website

YELLOWKNIFE (May 12, 2011): The Department of Environment and Natural Resources (ENR) launched a new NWT Species at Risk website today.

The website provides up-to-date information on species at risk in the NWT including legislation, the Species at Risk (NWT) Act, and information about the Species at Risk Committee and the Conference of Management Authorities.

NWT residents can learn about species at risk in their region and what they can do to help. They can also post their own pictures on the interactive picture gallery.

The Species at Risk (NWT) Act is a tool to identify, protect and recover species at risk in the NWT. All NWT residents have an important role to play in protecting and recovering species at risk for present and future generations.
